Dear [REDACTED]

Congratulations! I am very pleased to offer you admission to the Graduate Division of New York University School of Law. Your achievements have earned you a coveted place among accomplished individuals from more than 50 countries at one of the leading law schools in the United States. We look forward to having you join us as a candidate for the full-time LLM in Corporation Law this coming semester.

When you choose to study at NYU—and I hope you will—you'll find a deep bench of extraordinary faculty, actively engaged as theorists, practitioners, commentators, and policymakers. As leading academics, they direct the trailblazing work of the Law School's more than 30 centers and institutes, and their research makes a significant scholarly contribution to the pressing issues of today.

You will also come to know our professors as your dedicated teachers and mentors. Through an array of advanced seminars and colloquia, clinics, and simulation courses, your professors will bring insights from other disciplines to the classroom and encourage you to add your own perspective. They will advise you on your curriculum and supervise your research, and also point you to student groups, events, and other outstanding opportunities across the University that will enhance your experience. Expect to become part of a vibrant community and to be part of a network of passionate
